

Step 3 - General Train of Thought

We have taken our specific train of thought and began to look at it from a wider viewpoint.

"A line of metal, cog shaped links sewn into one side of a fabric that can connect and disconnect with a pulled conjoining device to a matching system on another fabric."

We want to keep the essence of the specifics but move to a general description. The general train of thought is an umbrella under which many trains of thought can exist. It should encompass your original specific train of thought but now is broad enough to also describe many other, unconnected trains of thought.

Let's now arrive at our general train of thought as such:

"An enduring system that creates temporary fastening through the interlocking of one side to the other."
